CIF-SS' NEWEST SPONSOR BECOMES LARGEST CORPORATE SPONSOR

The Saucony and Spot-bilt brands of Hyde Athletic Industries recently signed a three-year contract with the CIF Southern Section. Hyde's new contract which is the largest corporate support contract in the CIF-SS' history, calls for the shoe company to sponsor all Southern Section championship events. In addition, Hyde is currently offering CIF-SS member schools two discount offers: Students, a free CIF-SS duffle bag with the purchase of any pair of Saucony or Spot-bilt shoes and coaches, a $10 cash rebate, free CIF-SS golf shirt and membership in the Saucony/Spot-bilt Advisory Staff. John Fisher, the Executive Vice President of Hyde, is very excited about the contract

"The California athletic shoe market is one of the most complex and lucrative in the country. Our half-century commitment has been to high school and college athletes and we felt the opportunity to support the CIF-SS was perfectly in line with our Saucony and Spot-bilt product focus. It gives us an excellent opportunity to promote not only our products, but also to promote athletics on the high school level."

WOMEN'S SMALL BASKETBALL APPROVED STATEWIDE FOR 1985-86 SEASON

The State CIF Federated Council at their February 1, 1985 meeting, acted to approve the use of the smaller sized women's basketball for all California schools, beginning with the 1985-86 school year.

The new basketball, which is lighter and smaller than the men's ball, was used by the NCAA this year. The approved ball is $28\frac{1}{2}$ to 29 inches in circumference, weighs 18 to 20 ounces, and has narrow ($\frac{1}{8}$) seams.

"Extensive high school experimentation and the use of the smaller ball on the collegiate level this year both strongly support the rule change," commented Dick Schindler, assistant director of the National Federation and liaison to the basketball rules committee. "There's no question that the smaller ball enhances ball handling, rebounding and shooting skills, and consequently effects of the flow of the game in a positive manner."

GATORADE: THE NO. 1 THIRST QUENCHER RETURNS FOR SECOND YEAR AS SPONSOR

Gatorade, the best known and No. 1 selling thirst quencher in America, is actively concluding its second year as the CIF Southern Section's official electro-energy drink. Gatorade has also continued its popular practice of donating its coolers filled with product at most Southern Section championship events to the participating teams. Gatorade's Manager of Sports Promotion, Jeff Krueger, oversees the CIF-SS agreement.

"Gatorade Thirst Quencher is committed to supporting athletics in every form and at every level of play. Our commitment to the California Interscholastic Federation, Southern Section is to support high school athletics and all those who participate. We are pleased to be a part of this well-organized program in Southern California and look forward to future years with this fine athletic organization."

Saucony/Spot-bilt and Gatorade join hands with the California Angels, Los Angeles Dodgers, Dr Pepper, The Finals Swimwear, Ford, Pizza Hut, Wilson Sporting Goods Company and the WR Moody Trophy Company in supporting high school athletics through the CIF Southern Section's corporate support program.

COMMISSIONER'S CORNER

LEADING THE WAY

We talked about "communication" earlier, but one version is not exactly what I had in mind.

Without question, the realm of interscholastic competition fashions its share of elation as well as frustrations. It's how we handle the latter that provides the true accountability in our profession.

Recently, I've sensed that a small segment within our field has attempted to rationalize these frustrations personal setbacks, if you like - by means of a public forum.

More specifically, attempting to pinpoint the loss of an interscholastic contest on the shoulders of a game official has no place in our program.

Attempts at prolonging this personal frustration by means of direct comments through the Media lends little in the way of credence to our Code of Ethics - just in case we've forgotten, located on the inside front cover of our constitution and bylaws.

But there's another fear I sense at present, the fact isolated commentaries are also being added by members of the team.

Neither of the above are warranted and although confined to just a few. it will take a collective effort on our part to set the proper environment in which the positive growth of interscholastic athletics is to take place.

Our profession is exactly what it implies, the task of educating the young men and women entrusted to

... even if it means leading the way.

HIGH SCHOOL SPORTS NOT WITHOUT FLAWS

Sports in schools is great but not without flaws. If you don't think so, how about these -

Everybody who wants to participate doesn't get a realistic opportunity to do so, and everybody who practices doesn't necessarily get a chance to play.

There is no device to measure effort in respect to talent, or achievement in respect to potential; in other words, it seems the thing that matters most is points on the board.

A lot of adults in the community are most interested in the specific athletic segment of their schools than in the overall educational purpose.

There probably are more.

But of all the flaws in school sports, the worst - and the most puzzling - is the unsportsmanlike conduct that every now and then raises its ugly head. Why puzzling, you ask, since various degrees of unruly behavior seem to be the norm in many athletic contests, particularly on the professional level?

It's puzzling because sports in schools is supposed to be an educational process, not an inter-community confrontation, and sports in schools is supposed to be a game, not a medium for winners to raise triumphant fists in

It's puzzling, but it's there. We've got this flaw. It sticks out at times like a sore and irritating thumb. We've had situations in the past. We've had them again this year. Most of the time these bad conduct incidents involve coaches with a lack of maturity (or understanding) in regard to officials. Too many coaches really believe, apparently, it is all right to criticize officials during a game. In the heat of battle they forget that their conduct on the bench usually spreads across the floor to the players in front of them and often incites the spectators behind them.

The only way to curb the problem is for the coach to completely ignore the officials. That's hard to do in an emotional atmosphere but it's the only position that teachers (and a coach is a teacher) can take if they are trying to educate their athletes (and that's what a teacher is supposed to be doing even in a gymnasium full of frenzied spectators, half of whom think the referee is

We've got to keep in mind that unsportsmanlike conduct is the tip of the iceberg called violence. And there is no room in school sports for violence so we should keep unsportsmanlike conduct out of the gymnasium, too.

The way the world has gone berserk about athletic contests makes it hard, so hard, to remember that school sports is a game and a teaching station. But if we think sports belong in schools - and if we want to keep them there, we had better remember it.

CASE REPORT

A highly publicized sports injury and ensuing lawsuit in seattle have significant implications for coaches. This case arose out of a football injury in 1975. The plaintiff, Christopher Thompson, was a 15-year-old sophomore playing fullback for West Seattle high school. During a regular season game, Chris caught a swing pass in the backfield and ran to the line of scrimmage. Just before he was tackled, he lowered the trunk of his body parallel to the ground and, failing to keep his head up, collided head-to-head with a defensive back. The collision resulted in spinal cord damage, rendering Chris unable to use his arms or legs. Chris and his mother filed suit against his coach and the school district in 1978. In 1982, the jury awarded Chris and his mother $6,545,000. A 2% reduction for contributory negligence on the part of Chris was deducted from the amount awarded.

EDUCATIONAL MALPRACTICE

What makes this case so significant is not just the amount of the award, but also the reason for it. Chris argued that his coach and the school district were negligent in their training and teaching, that is, "educational malpractice." Chris didn't argue that he was not warned that football was a dangerous sport. Rather, he argued that the school district, to improve safe playing techniques, should have:

i) expressly told Chris that he might become a quadriplegic while playing football;

2) used movies and other visual aids to impress this warning upon him;

3) used different and/or more drills to teach him how to keep his head up when running with the ball and while making contact with another player; and

4) established a "curriculum" for football, as the district does for academic subjects or physical education. Chris admitted that he was taught to keep his head up, but claimed that he was not taught well enough and this caused his injury.

Chris testified that he was trying to "take" the defender with his helmet – that he simply reacted involuntarily and instinctively. But the defense argued that Chris' poor playing technique resulted from his own negligence, and whether the injury was caused by his coach's failure to warn or provide proper teaching methods was nothing more than conjecture. Under game pressure, the defense argued, Chris failed to execute his training – to keep his head up. So it was unfair to blame his coach. However, the jury agreed with Chris and awarded him damages. The case was appealed and later settled.

PROTECTIVE ACTION

The Seattle case has shocked both coaches and lawyers throughout the nation, and as a result many new protective steps have been taken.

One of the effects has been an effort by coaches to identify and list major catastrophic injuries that could occur in each sport, and how the athlete can be instructed to avoid these injuries. For example, Centralia high school in Washington has designed a safety list for football players as a model of prevention. It includes a place for parental signatures confirming that they have read and understand the issues involved and that they approve of their child's participation. Part of the Centralia form

"By rule, the helmet is not be used as a 'ram.' Initial contact is not to be made with the helmet. It is not possible to play the game safely or correctly without making contact with the helmet when properly blocking and tackling an opponent. Therefore, technique is most important to prevention of injuries . . .

If the head is bent downward, the cervical (neck) vertebrae are in a bind and contact on the top of the helmet could result in a dislocation, nerve damage, paralysis or even death. If the back is not straight the thoracic (mid-back) and lumbar vertebrae are also vulnerable to injury with similar results if contact again is made to the top of the helmet. Centralia's daily workout includes isometric-type exercises; the development of strength in the neck muscles is one of the best methods of preventing head injury and enabling an individual to hold his head up even after getting tired during a workout or contest. . ."

The Seattle case underlines the need for coaches and physical

- Explain and spell out clearly to their student-athletes, in specific terms, the risks and dangers of a physical education or athletic activity;
- Be aware of the latest safety techniques for each activity being taught;
- Stay up-to-date on conditioning techniques for each activity taught:
- Review proper techniques in skill teaching and performance of the activity;
- Emphasize potential for injuries if the proper techniques are not used; and
- 6. Be familiar with first aid procedures and techniques.

Stressing these safety factors in the classroom, coaching sessions, and the site of the activity will benefit the student-athlete and the coach. It will also help protect the coach and his supervisors in case of litigation.

The following methods will help reinforce minimal levels of safety:

- 1. Communication of the specific dangers of each activity;
- Correct instruction in skill performance, including the risks and dangers of injury resulting from incorrect performance;
- Supervise and monitor the activity so that safety rules are followed:
- Documentation of all instruction related to safe skill performance, game, and classroom participation; and
- Demonstration and documentation of coaches' and staff members' knowledge of first aid methods and safety techniques in the event of injury.

These guidelines will provide a minimal framework of what you are legally required to demonstrate. However, as a coach or physical educator you have an obligation and a responsibility not only to your student-athlete, but also to yourself. You have a legal responsibility to be knowledgeable of the standards of care. You must stay well-informed of safe and legal techniques of play, and the care and prevention of injuries. Just as you stay up-to-date in the latest coaching techniques you must continually improve your training through classes, seminars, workshops and materials. Finally, with the knowledge of appropriate standards, you must conduct yourself in conformance with these standards.
